So you want a commission?

Amazing! I'm very excited to bring to life your artistic vision! I'm going to need you to answer a few questions first to get started:

- What are you commissioning? (ex: DnD character, a picture of your pet, a birthday invite….etc)
- What do you want to receive as a final result? (ex: physical art delivered to your home vs digital files. A single portrait of a character vs a character in an active pose depicted in a full scene and setting)
- What is your budget for this project?

Sometimes art is more expensive than we expect! Some ways to help reduce the fee of your commission request are the following (and please indicate to me what you will provide with the above info):
- Providing a mini for a character commission, as well as a document describing the character including physical characteristics, personality, weapons, etc, basically any details that could influence the appearance of your character!
- Having a large window of time in which a project needs to be completed. You don't need to commission something a whole year in advance, but projects with short deadlines relative to the scale of the commission are often more expensive than projects with a wide window of time to complete them.
- Color vs. Black and White. Images in full color will be more expensive than monochrome! Same goes for Physical Media vs. Digital. Besides shipping and material costs, physical media will generally be more expensive than digital media.
- Drawing your own rough sketch of what you want for a commission of a scene, character in an active pose, or a painting! I don't expect it to look pretty or go beyond stick figures. As long as it is a visually legible drawing, a rough sketch for me ahead of time can really reduce the amount of time I anticipate going back and forth with you about composition to make sure I'm giving you what you want.
